How to Prepare for the Coronavirus

Coronavirus cases continued to be confirmed in the United States. By following some basic steps, you can help reduce your risk, and do your part to protect others, if your community is affected. (By The New York Times)

Here's what you can do:

- Keep your hands clean, and keep your distance from sick people
- Unless you are already infected, face masks won't help you
- Stock up on home supplies, medicine and resources
- Prepare your family, and communicate your plan
- With your children, keep calm and carry on – and get the flu shot
- About to go on vacation? Consider your destination and how you feel about risk
- Take a deep breathe when thinking about the stock market

The coronavirus continues to spread in Asia, Europe and the Middle East, with more than 70 cases and two deaths confirmed in the United States (up to March 2nd)

While the Food and Drug Administration announced this weekend that testing in the United States would be greatly expanded, healthy experts have been warning that the virus spread in the country is inevitable. That means it's time to prepare your home and family in case your community is affected.

Most important: Do not panic. While the outbreak is a serious public health concern, the majority of those who contract the coronavirus do not become seriously ill, and only a small percentage require intensive care.

By following some basic steps, you can help reduce your risk and do your part to protect others.
